CROWDED AVENUES

Occasionally I walk down crowded avenues
Often stopping —
To look at the pretty windows
Or to miss being trampled on

In the day or the night,
But usually in the night
I am not seen
On the quickly moving pavement

The faces are seen and analyzed
Although they soon become a blur.
I cannot help
But fall behind the passers-by.

AN EXISTENCE OF IDENTIFICATION

Through a toyland of childhood images
Appearances seen through their own description
Are found in a book of "Mother Goose and Other Nursery Rhymes"
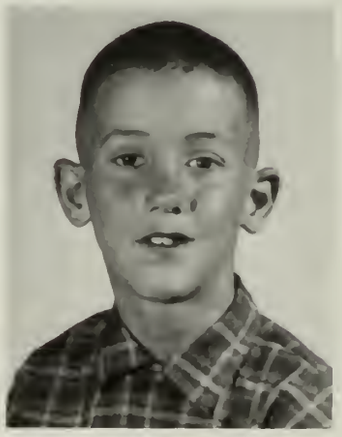
. . . Singular, clear, and concise
Their definitions in an enclosed world
Are nurtured by someone's creativeness
Discovered on a chartered omnibus

Of crayola crayons and finger paints
On Manilla paper . . .
Depicting stick limbed man
Standing on green grass
Under a blue sky
And a yellow sun;
Where crying shows a sign of hate and fear
And smiling surrounded by tinsel and pixie dust
Is happy and good.



But in an evolution of change,
Where man shows himself by his inside,
And toward a complex intangible network of changing moods and thoughts
The sky becomes vast and the view cloudy.
In our existence of continuing discovery,
What devices do we use to find meaning?
Through the words and forewarnings of the poet we can only
Accept his definitions and descriptions.
But through an existence of identification, we can say "Yes, . . . I know"

W. Ainsworth
